3                                 growth, and the people of the United States now rely 4                                 on broadband connectivity as an increasingly nec-
5                                 essary part of daily life;

6                                 (2) broadband services are used by private citi-
7                                 zens, businesses, public groups, and government

9                                 nicate, access information, share cultures, develop 10                                 technologies, and grow economies nationally and 11                                 internationally;

12                                 (3) while wireless and broadband technologies 13                                 have contributed significantly to progress throughout 14                                 the United States, lack of broadband deployment to 15                                 rural communities has put rural parties at a greater 16                                 disadvantage for economic development; and

17                                 (4) delays in the permitting process are costly 18                                 and discouraging to broadband deployment and fur-
